DUNBAR DODO noticed a line of people standing in front of a store window.

"That's odd," he said to himself. "This store has been empty a long time. I wonder who has moved in."

He went up to the crowd, got on tiptoes, and peered in the window.

"Get in line!" commanded a voice. "No chiseling allowed!"

Dunbar recognized the familiar voice of J. Fenimore Frog, who stood at the head of the line.

"Glad to," replied the Dodo meekly. "But what are we waiting for?"

"To get our fortunes told," said Fenimore.

Sure enough, the Dodo saw a small sign on the window which read, YOUR FORTUNE TOLD—50c! Inside, he saw a little booth in which an old gypsy was holding a customer's hand, telling his fortune.

"Nice little business," mused Dunbar to himself. He counted the people. There were twenty in all.

"Twenty times fifty cents—why, that's ten dollars!" exclaimed Dunbar, louder than he had intended.

Fenimore overheard the remark—and he, too, got to thinking. "Nice little racket," said he. "I wonder if I could . . ."

At that moment a man came out of the store, and Fenimore went in. He paid his 50c, had his fortune told, and came out smiling.

"Say, Dodo!" he said. "The fortune teller told me that my future will be very good. I'm going to make a lot of money, but I must watch out for somebody who will try to steal my business from me!"

"What business?" asked Dunbar.

"None of your business!" quipped Fenimore, walking away.

Shortly after, Dunbar Dodo came out of the fortuneteller's booth, smiling from ear to ear. He, too, had been promised a rosy future—and had received the same warning as the frog: beware of someone who will try to ruin you!

Neither Dodo nor Frog had had any idea of going into any kind of business at any time, but that was before they had their fortunes told. Business meant work—and that was something they both despised. But Dunbar's remark had given them both a great idea—a business without work!

That night the lights burned long in the homes of Dodo and Frog, for both were busy studying for their newly-chosen professions.

Early the next morning, the real estate agent for Smith Beach had a visitor. It was J. Fenimore Frog. Ten minutes later he left carrying a receipt for the rental of a small beach front lot. Hardly had he gone when Dunbar Dodo came in. And he, too, soon left clutching a receipt for the rental of a small beach, front lot!

That afternoon, two small tents were being put up on the beach, side by side. Grunting and snorting, and darting occasional glances of hate and rage at each other, it wasn't long before Dodo and Frog were ready for business. Dunbar had his sign up first. It read: YOUR TRUE FORTUNE AS TOLD BY THE STARS! D. DODO, PROP.

Fenimore sneeringly looked it over, and in a few moments his sign was ready. It stated: YOUR REAL FORTUNE AS TOLD BY THE STARS AND A PACK OF CARDS. F. FROG, PROP.

Dodo took a look at it and sniffed. He soon changed his sign, making it bigger and better. It now read: YOUR TRUE FORTUNE TOLD BY THE STARS, CARDS, AND THE CRYSTAL BALL. ALSO PHRENOLOGY!

That last word, when he read the sign, not only enraged Fenimore but it had him completely stumped. He dug out his dictionary and looked up the word.

"So!" exclaimed Fenimore. "It means you read a person's fortune by feeling the bumps on his head! Okay, I'll do it, too! He can't trump me!"

Fenimore got busy with the paint brush and a big white piece of cardboard. Soon he stepped back to look at his masterpiece:

YOUR FORTUNE TOLD ANY OLD WAY—STARS, OUIJA BOARD, CRYSTAL BALL, BUMPOLOGY, PALMS—ALSO TEA LEAVES. ALL FOR THE SMALL PRICE OF FIFTY CENTS! F. FROG, PROP.

When Dunbar Dodo read Fenimore's new effort, he was beside himself with rage. He stamped into his tent and grabbed the paint brush. Dashing outside, he went to work on the whole front of his tent. He wanted a big sign—no little cardboard for him!

First, he painted a big black arrow which pointed at the Frog's tent. Then he printed in enormous letters:

ALL THAT — AND COFFEE GROUNDS, TOO!—FOR ONLY TWENTY-FIVE CENTS! COME ONE, COME ALL SWAMI DODO.

Fenimore looked at the sign and exploded. This was too much, cutting prices in times like this! After all, neither of them had taken in a dime! He stormed into the Dodo's tent.

"Sit right down, sir," said Dodo, "and I'll—"

Then he saw who it was.

"You sit down!" screamed Fenimore, landing a right uppercut to Dodo's chin.

Dodo sat—but only for a moment. Up he sprang and leaped for Fenimore. Then suddenly, in the midst of the tussle, the tent collapsed!

Wearily, Fenimore and Dunbar crawled out. They saw a little boy giggling at them.

"Tee-hee," laughed the boy, "look what I've got!"

He reached into his pocket and brought out a huge lollypop. As he unwrapped it, a small piece of paper fluttered to the sand.

Dodo and Frog grabbed it, and both read it together;

"This Jumbo Lollypop—and Your Fortune Told—Both for One Cent. Read Your Fortune on the Other Side."

They turned it over and read: "You will make a great deal of money, but beware of someone who will try to steal your business from you!"

"This is where we came in!" chorused Dodo and Frog, as they promptly passed out!
